

WELCOME TO YMUNE XIV

The Yale Model United Nations Europe conference brings together experienced Yale students and delegates from around the world to create an innovative, collaborative, and inspiring conference. As an organization associated with Yale's International Relations Association, YMUNE seeks to raise awareness of and foster discussion about international relations in the European context through simulations of global crises and fast-paced debate.

A UNIQUE CONFÉRENCE EXPERIENCE....

Our conference boasts a unique take on Model UN seen nowhere else. It is the only conference in the world with its globally unique committee and conference structure, where high-school students converge from around the world to debate events of global importance and put their creativity, diplomacy, and problem-solving abilities to the test. Delegates learn how to actively search for compromises and agreement, while having crisis updates thrown at them every step of the way. They embody a diversity of perspectives and represent them as close as possible, our Regional Bodies help emulate regional politics in other areas of the world in the same universe as each other and the EU committees.

YMUNE XIV presents..... THE COMMITTEES

The General Assemblies (GAs) are the largest organ in YMUNE but not any less rigorous and intense. They come the closest to simulating a real United Nations committee in terms of their real-life topics, size, and structure; while the large size of the GAs allows for a more beginner-friendly experience, this organ hosts delegates from all kinds of background and experience levels. Thus, the format of the organ requires delegates to conduct thorough research, be an active proponent of their resolutions, and work effectively with other members regardless of their background.

The Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC) features mid-sized committees dedicated to tackling critical economic, social, and environmental issues essential for global development. These committees provide an opportunity for delegates to engage in deep, collaborative debates within a smaller, more focused setting. Regional bodies cover a more specific region of the world and its particular needs and issues in the broader context of the UN. Because of their more nuanced point of view, regional bodies usually host delegates with more experience or overall delegates who are comfortable leading the debate in a smaller committee setting.

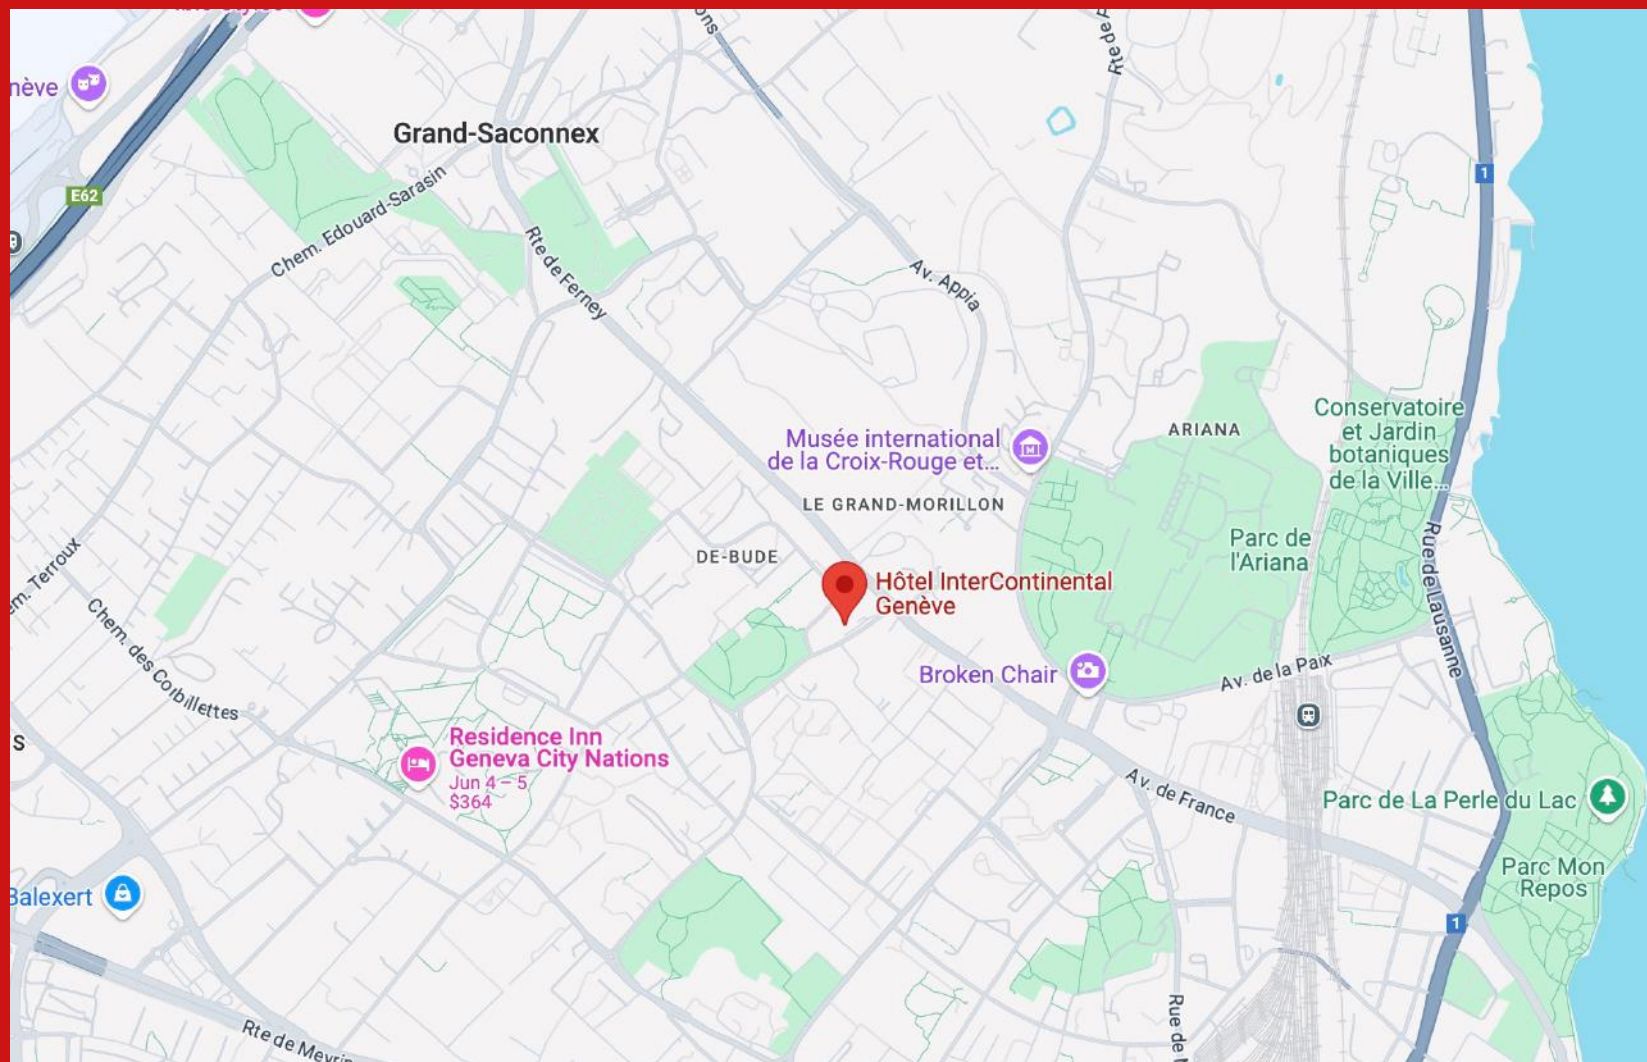

Specialized committees are small-to-medium sized each with its own unique focus. The structure of the committee makes for lively debate, nuanced points of view, and innovative resolutions to some of the most pressing world issues while reimagining the past and present in resolution-making. At YMUNE, specialized committees aim to simulate fast-paced decision-making for global leaders by weaving crisis updates into the committee experience, to which delegates ought to respond in a timely manner.

Crisis committees are fast-paced and innovative, focused on creative problem solving, as delegates are required to develop solutions to the problem at hand using both their own resources and the resources of others in a collaborative manner. Due to its small size, the organ welcomes more experienced delegates who are comfortable with leading the debate and adapt quickly to the rapidly changing situation inside committee.
